Many individuals are not able to tell us with words how they feel or what exactly is bothering them. But they can and do frequently tell us by a change in the way they act or the sounds they make. Often, it is the direct service provider who knows the individuals the best and is able to pick up small changes that could be signs of illness. When such changes happen direct service providers often describe the individual as “not right”, “something is wrong”, “not themselves”. How the change is described to a physician will make a difference in the physician’s ability to understand the value of the observation, figure out what the problem is and treat it.

When you notice that someone is not right, it may be helpful to think about describing your observations by comparing them to how the individual usually behaves or appears. When you look at the person or think about what you are seeing, what is different from what you usually see?

- Does he /she have a different look on their face? Tired, afraid, in pain?
- Are they sitting or moving differently? Protecting a hand or foot, refusing to take a position that is normal for him/her?
- Is there a change in the type of sounds a person is making? Are they more highly pitched? Or perhaps they are not making any sounds at all.
- What is their temperature?
- What is their breathing like?
- What is their color like? Pale or red? Blue around the lips?
- Have you seen this before? When? What was going on?
- Has there been a recent new medication, adjustment to medication or diagnosis that might help explain the change?
- Sometimes a significant change in a person’s life or relationships will cause behavioral or physical signs. Has there been a death or loss of a person or a change in a routine?
- Are they eating and drinking? If so, is this different than their usual pattern?
- Is there a change in their bowel or bladder habits?
- Has there been a change in their willingness or ability to participate in activities?
- When did you notice this change? Did it just start today, or has this been a gradual change?

IF YOU NOTICE CHANGES, WHAT SHOULD YOU DO?

Call 911 if this happens:
- The change is very sudden
- The person looks very sick
- The person won’t wake up

In other situations:
- Call or talk to your supervisor or nurse about what you see or hear
- Write down what you see or hear and share the information with other staff.
- Talk about what you see and hear with other staff and write down what they report
- Make a physician appointment
- Keep notes of what you see and hear and bring them with you to the Dr.’s appointment to assist the physician in diagnosing the problem.
