INFO and RESOURCES

1. New For Veterans, Language About Mental Health Matters – While serving in the United States Marine Corps, during training, Silouan Green had just taken off when his jet caught fire, forcing him to eject. During the crash, his copilot died, and Green’s back shattered. As the days in the hospital stacked on top of one another, Green deteriorated. The worse he felt physically, the worse he also felt emotionally, and vice versa. “When I was depressed, I wouldn’t work out, which caused me to be in more physical pain, and, in turn, I became more depressed.” Today, Green is a suicide prevention advocate. He says that being in the military or a first responder is an identity. The loss of identity can contribute to a person’s deterioration. He talks about the problems with labels and the power of connection to help people through challenging times. Learn More
